Keep reading to learn how air handlers work and how they differ from other HVAC options.How Does an Air Handler Work?An air handler does just as its name implies – it handles the air in your house. This fuel usually comes in the form of natural gas, propane or oil. An air handler circulates air inside your home to help the heat pump maintain your desired temperature.What's the Difference Between an Air Handler and Furnace?A furnace produces heat by burning fuel. Attach the shredding head to the meat grinder base then attach the course shredding cone. Feed the zucchini into the shredding head and push it down using the vegetable pusher. It has many other components. When looking at an air handler, it's not uncommon to mistake it for a furnace.An air handler doesn't produce cool air. This confuses some people because they don't realize that even when it's cold outside, there is still heat in the air.What's the Difference Between an Air Handler and Blower?Although an air handler has a blower, it is not designed to operate solely as a blower. If you're looking for a conventional heating and cooling system, you most likely won't need an air handler. Inside of the air handler is a blower, which moves the air throughout various parts of the home. During the winter, the heat pump uses its refrigerant to capture heat energy from the outside air and then moves it inside. It has an evaporator coil that is cold during the summer and removes humidity when the air passes over it. Next, attach the meat grinder head and grind the chicken thighs and breasts, alternating each while pushing it through. This causes the air handler to blow warm air to heat the home.
